Extracts.

The winds that once the age bore,
Have died by Neptune's ruined steeds;
And her hull is the drift of the clean sea-shore,
Though sleep'd of Pelion's tallest pine.
My men are dead; creeps over every land,
But out of their rest no charm can wile
Jasen, and Orpheus, and Hercules.
And Prian's wall is heard no more.

By wind Ilion's sea-built walls;

More than a thousand years ago,

Shouts "Ye gods!" his Hector falls;

On Ida's mount lies the shining snow.

But Jove has gone from his brow away,

And the Gravest and the Dolorous grins,

Whereat the Gods and the Heroes die.

Mother Earth are the Heros dead?

Do they thrill the soul of the years no more?

Are the gleaming bows and the poppy red

As the bloom of the rose of your heart?

Are there none to fight? Then the thought,

In the young world's mighty dream?

Or to teach as the gray-haired Nestor taught?

Great Earth! I are we heroes gone?

Dead?—We may share their lands in ours;

And catch the light of their clear eyes,

And wreath the brows with immortal flowers;

Whose aegis is a shield, whose a heart is stilled;

Wherever light has a triumph won.

Then are the Heros' voices heard?

Their armours ring on a fairer field?

For the world is a field, whereof ye tread;

For friends are sword, the blade thereof bright;

And the light above is the smile of God;

So in his bale the calm delight.

Jasen may sleep the year away;

The world is a braver world today.
